Private lawyers (fee for service)

Private lawyers can provide advice and representation, but they will charge legal or professional fees. It is important to seek ethical, informed advice, as poor advice can have serious consequences. We recommend choosing a firm with a Law Institute Accredited Immigration Law Specialist.

Lawyers must explain their fees clearly and follow professional standards. For more information, visit:
www.lsbic.vic.gov.au/consumers/choosing-and-working-your-lawyer

You do not have to continue with a lawyer if you are unhappy with their service.

The ASRC recommends the lawyers listed below for help with:

- Protection visa applications and interviews
- Tribunal reviews and court appeals
- Ministerial intervention requests
- Family, skilled, work, and student visas
- Complex health or character matters
- Visa cancellations and responses to adverse information

Migration lawyers do not need to be registered migration agents to provide migration advice. However, you should only accept advice from:

- Migration or refugee lawyers, or
- Registered migration agents.
